Statesboro after Michael's Law

In recent years, it has become harder for underage students to get away with underage drinking throughout the state of Georgia due to Michael's law, which was put in place after the death of Michael Gatto, who was a Georgia Southern freshman at the time of his death. Full Story.

Eagles look to bounce back in Texas

After falling to Georgia State on Saturday, the women's basketball team hopes to rebound against two good Texas teams. The Eagles have struggled in conference play this season, only winning two games. Full Story.

Men's basketball intends to continue winning momentum in Texas

The men's basketball team looks to carry momentum from big Georgia State win into Texas for two big games. The Eagles face UT-Arlington on Thursday and Texas State on Saturday. Full Story.

Lunsford gets pied in the face for fundraising event

Students "showed up and showed out" at the Rotunda on Wednesday to throw cream pies at the Eagles' head coach Chad Lunsford and Georgia Southern University SOAR leaders in an effort to raise money for classroom supplies for teachers and students. Full Story.

A look into Reece's Pieces, Statesboro's eclectic herbalist hobby shop

Nestled into the Statesboro Market District sits Reece's Pieces, the eclectic herbalist hobby shop owned in part by Brian Thompson. From wall tapestries and vintage video games to glass tobacco pipes and

Buddhist prayer beads, Thompson said everything in the store is a labor of love. Full Story.
